The Cup of Coffee

It was already ten o'clock and James was still looking at his coffee, stirring from time to time. There was a lot of noise coming from the street, but that did not stop his thoughts. That day started too soon and many things had already happened.

The sun was shining stupidly. When the door opened, he turned his face towards the person coming in with eyes wide open. But he turned his face back again to his coffee with a sigh. He took the newspaper and opened it somewhere in the middle and started turning pages still in silence. Looking sad, he took a sip from the cup of coffee, and left it down again on the plate. He felt a hand on the shoulder and turned his face towards a pale hand with a golden ring. He jumped to his feet with a wide smile, showing his green eyes for the first time.

They both sat down in silence. Peter ordered another cup of coffee for Jimmy and one for himself, double, please!. With tears on his eyes, James said, I'm sorry. Peter held his hand. The waiter brought a couple of steaming coffee, filling the atmosphere with a warm smell. It was raining outside. There was a yellow taxi waiting outside.

Glossary: stirring: removiendo; steaming: humeante.
